Preface

THE annual issue of the Bibliotheca Celtica was, from force of circumstances, suspended during the great war. The present volume, the sixth, covers five years, 1914–18. It is therefore of value as reflecting the influence of the war upon the extent and nature of literary effort in Wales, and in the other Celtic countries, during that eventful period.

An endeavour has been made to collect for preservation all printed material dealing with the war and the numerous activities surrounding it, not, it is feared with anything like completeness. Many people were too much occupied, and others too modest or shy, to respond to the numerous applications sent out. They failed to understand that the locally printed record of a memorial service, a local roll of men serving their country, and many other things of the kind, are valuable when merged in a large collection, and reflect the extent to which the Principality took its share of the effort called forth by the war. In the next volume rolls of honour will find a place. Many have been received, but some are still outstanding, and copies of these will be welcomed.

As in previous volumes the body of the work is arranged in one alphabetical sequence by authors; the Journals and Transactions of publishing societies have been transferred to the section Newspapers and Periodicals (page 410). During the war many periodicals ceased publication. Some have since resumed, and an attempt has been made to give the dates of suspension and resumption. National Eisteddfod literature formerly included in the body of the work, under the name of the town where the National Eisteddfod was held, has been transferred to the Eisteddfod section.

The reports of societies and institutions, official publications, programmes, etc. issued annually or oftener, (pp. 325–393), represent an important series of documents for the study of local history, economic and social conditions, and other phases of life in Wales. The printing of many of these was suspended for a time, and some which were issued have not been received, yet the collection, imperfect though it is known to be, will be of great service, and it is hoped to continue and complete it.

Among the points of interest in this volume are the increase in the number of entries in Irish-Gaelic, the result of the movement for the revival of the Irish language, and an entry of a translation into Welsh Romany which will be found on page 178.

At the end of the volume appears a supplementary list of Celtic publications issued during the years 1909–13, not previously recorded, and some received too late for inclusion in their proper place in the present volume.

A list of pseudonyms occurring in the volume is given on pages 449–452.

Sincere thanks are due to the numerous friends who have helped to secure for the Library many of the publications recorded, and especially to M. Gourville, of Morlaix, for valuable assistance with regard to Breton publications.
